◆ Submitted by CERFE an NGO in general consultative status with ECOSOC:
 An international research project on vulnerability, poverty and social exclusion, which includes field studies from Morocco and Mozambique, was carried out by CERFE on behalf of UN/DESA, with funding provided by the Government of Italy. An innovative approach model was designed and tested for analyzing and measuring poverty and social exclusion while supporting the design and implementation of social policies. Starting from the recognition of poor people as social actors, it focuses on their subjectivity and social agency, an important notion for the formulation of anti-poverty policies. It adopts the distinction between poverty and social exclusion, which affects people who are not necessarily poor but may be at risk for becoming poor, including people with particular vulnerabilities, such as older persons, youth or the chronically ill. The model also allows for the measurement and quantification of poverty and social exclusion, taking into account their multidimensional character and thus focusing. not only on economic, but also social influences and causes. The results of this research was presented during a successful side event on “Vulnerability, poverty and social exclusion - New methods of appraisal for public policy-making and civil society action” on 10 February 2005 during the 43rd Session of the United Nations Commission for Social Development. The event was moderated by Sergei Zelenev, UN/DESA with Alfonso Alfonsi, Vice President CERFE, Abderrahim Harouchi, Minister of Social Development, Family and Solidarity, Morocco, and Giovanni Daverio, General Director of the Ministry of Labour and Social Policies, Italy.
